Part 4: Short Talk Questions (2%)

Animals have incredible navigational skills. Hank, a loyal dog, spent over two days walking almost 20 kilometers back to his old home. He made the journey despite being taken to his new home in a car. Holly, a house cat, traveled over 300 kilometers after getting lost. Back home, her microchip confirmed Holly's identity. How do these animals have such a strong sense of direction? Scientists claim dogs use their strong noses to pick up overlapping circles of scents. For instance, dogs sense a tree's scent, pointing to a neighbor's dog's scent, leading to the smell of home. Cats rely on magnetic fields and the large amount of iron in their ears to guide them. (4-p. 42-43)

(C) 11. What do Hank and Holly have in common?

(A) They are both loyal dogs.
(B) They are both house cats.
(C) They have a strong sense of direction.
(D) They belong to the same owner.

(B) 12. How might dogs find their way home?

(A) They rely on magnetic fields.
(B) They have a strong memory.
(C) They connect different scents together.
(D) They can smell things from miles away.
